

Stewart has a very busy schedule, this is mostly due to him not being able to manage his time efficiently. Not only does he struggle with his time management skills but he also has the worst luck with finding a parking spot. Dawson is now late to teach his 12:33 PM classes.

Due to his inconsistency of showing up on time, his students start to gossip and then eventually only few bother to show up to class. This pushes Stewart to resort to alcohol. Where he is now left feeling even more miserable. If only there was something to help him find a parking space that somewhat helps with his terrible management skills...

Miracles do happen! Stewart walks into class only to find Napoleon at the front of the classroom doing some big brain thinking. Napoleon tells his professor the secret of being assured a parking space. He shows him the app that he downloaded on his phone.

Now that Stewart knows the secret, he has been able to keep a record of seven days of arriving right on time. Thanks to the parking app his students finally respect him. He is as happy as a clam and is attending his first AA meeting for the first time in his life.
